Park City Film Studios™ recently began production on a new music video utilizing its virtual stage located at Utah Valley University's satellite campus in Heber City, Utah. The music video is based on 1960's era unreleased music that emphasizes world peace and will feature famous film makers from around the world who are providing footage from their countries.

The World Peace Video™ and featured music composition, Flanders Fields, is designed to create a visual call for world peace. Created by a united group of international film makers and artists, this video is not specific to one war or a horrific human event such as 911 or the recent French massacre, but to any and all ongoing acts of violence against men, women and children.

In Flanders Fields, a well-known war poem written during WWI inspired the 1960's featured composition and is featured because of the intense emotion of everyday men, women and children who experienced violence of mass proportions and spoke up asking for remembrance and lasting world peace.

Park City Film Studios™

Park City Film Studios™ is a mixed-use film studio and creative campus now under development in Park City, Utah. The 374,000 square foot facility will include soundstages, production offices, and an array of studio services including the digital motion capture stage and technology. Studio representatives are already in discussion with film companies, television shows, game producers, and commercial productions in anticipation of the studios' first phase opening early 2015.
